WHAT PROMINENT EDUCATORS THINK OF THE MOVEMENT

Wm. N. Slaton, Superintendent of Schools, Atlanta, Ga.—"To accomplish the maximum good, the National Congress of Mothers is vigorously stressing the wisdom of forming Parent-Teacher Associations in city, town and country throughout the United States. The movement is the product of logical thought, patriotic interest, and altruistic motive. The foundation of this movement is so broad, deep and safe as to challenge the co-operation of intelligent men and women. It is the honor of the mothers of the United States that the vital connection between home and school has been placed in the limelight and is commanding the vigorous support of the press and of women in every progressive community. Once the mind appreciates the connection between childhood interest and civilization, parent-teacher organizations are inevitable. Every intelligent person knows that the child's vital interests are fixed for life before ten years of age and that the work of the school only supplements the teachings of the home, hence a necessity for organizing a close connection between the home and the school.

In parent-teacher meetings full, free and friendly discussion establishes the relations that ought to exist between the parent and the teacher.
